FOSTER MOM PUTS "I" IN THE BIBLE

There are dozens of translations of the Bible, yet the multi-million dollar Bible industry executives and their corporate "think-tanks" never thought of this. Amazingly, the idea was born in the heart of a foster parent living in a small town in Oklahoma as she sat on the edge of her bed reading her Bible.

"The simplest ideas can be the greatest ideas. The ones that make you say, 'Why didn't I think of that?'" said Julia August, "People ask me that all the time. Why hasn't someone already done this?"

August's book, "myBible: Standing on the Promises" is a collection of life-pertinent promises all found in the Bible. But her translation has a twist. It's totally personal. Every scripture has been categorized by topic and rewritten in the first person.

"We put the 'I' in the Bible," she says, "and the results are amazing. When you read these promises as if God wrote them on a sticky note and left them for you, it really has the power to change your life. I've never experienced anything like it."

While word-for-word translations can take over a decade, for August, gathering, personalizing and organizing the Scriptures took almost two years. Working a full time job and caring for her own son and other foster children left her only a few hours each evening to put the book together.

"It seemed like an impossible task at times and sometimes I did get tired. Being a single parent caring for several teenagers made it even more challenging, but I knew I couldn't quit. I knew it could change people's lives - for the good."
